At the same time, other people argue:
The number of blogs continues to grow at an almost exponential rate.

During the previous three years, the number of blogs has doubled every six months, resulting in an average of one new blog launched every second, and more than a million new posts being published each day. Over the course of 1999 and yet by late summer 2006, blogs search engine Technorati was reporting nearly five million blogs worldwide.

The numbers are staggering. The word blog wasn't coined until 1999, and yet by late summer 2006, blogs search engine Technorati was reporting nearly five million blogs worldwide.

The phenomenon has not yet been fully captured by the lexicon and nomenclature of the English language. It's a new phenomenon, and there are no easy definitions for the word blog. The Merriam-Webster Dictionary, which defines the coining of words, stated that the word blog was coined in 2004.

There are no easy definitions for the word blog. The Merriam-Webster Dictionary defines the word blog as an online personal journal that houses reflections, commentary, and opinion. The word blog is an evolving term, and its meaning is still being determined.
